219447969848631296 @binarybits It's basically just the tax version of the activity/inactivity distinction.

12:10:47, 7-1, 2012 Echofon

219447001522257920 @binarybits Not sure why a tax on not-owning-a-gun is so different from a tax on owning-a-gun. Both are states of being.

12:06:56, 7-1, 2012 Echofon

219445758959693824 I still think Levy is wrong though; Congress is limiting the incidence of the tax, not the amount, and doing so to achieve a uniform effect.

Can anyone explain why the mandate isn't an excise tax? The explanations of both Ilya Somin and Robert Levy seem transparently false.

But I refuse to believe that Apple doesn't need a CDO.

I'd be totally fine with Cook getting the title CEO and I've getting Chief Design Officer or something.

I totally agree with that. I just think he can have Cook do it for him.

@eshear Many congrats on the new job!

Have you ever worked in a large organization? At some point someone needs to make the call.

Even with the strongest shared vision, there will be disputes. Who resolves them?

I do think you need a single vision. It could come from someone other than the top, but I think that's unlikely at Apple.

If you seriously think Jobs is going to leave Apple without 1, then I don't think you understand Jobs or Apple.

Here's my argument: http://t.co/CRzNePt Is it right to say we agree on everything except 6?

I'm not saying he can't; I'm just saying those changes were about execution, not design.

Cook's the guy who makes it happen when someone else decides it absolutely needs to be done.

Right. That's the kind of stuff Apple needs a design leader to do. Would Cook ever do that?

Input is very different from design.

What software did Jobs design?

But VP of only industrial design, not any other kind of design.

I think we mostly agree. But how long until Cook says "report to I've for all design decisions"? And why no gradual transition?

Destroy!

Honestly, I don't think it'd work as well in the tighter format of a DF post. But for the podcast it was brilliant.

Cultural progress?

Jobs, 97: Taking the chairman's job, in particular, Jobs said, would "scare away" any real candidate for the CEO's job.

After losing $90M: "I feel a sense of freedom. People think that it's a joy to own things. But it really isn't."

@gruber hints at this: Jobs, 1997: "The old board of directors at Apple is history."

The latest Greg Mortenson update is by far the most damning yet:

RT @bos31337: The CEO of "Food for the Poor" is "Robin Mahfood". I am not making this up.

@kragen is really making the most of his 15 minutes of Hacker News fame.

When viewing a user's stream, Twitter should let you hide @replies so you can sensibly decide whether to follow them or not.

@PathHadley What's your thesis on?

@robin_ahn I'm saying someone should write a book setting them straight.

@robin_ahn Many brilliant quantum physicists went on to try to extend their physics into bogus speculation about society.

@FloatingU claims "Our lectures are equivalent to taking a 600-page book and reading it in one hour." So your lecturers speak at 2500 wpm?

Someone should do a _Fashionable Nonsense_ that debunks bogus social theory spouted by quantum physicists.

If you're looking for some hurricane reading, the early chapters of _Haiti_ are gripping.

Python will stay open as long as your program is still doing anything. Calling raw_input() will cause it to wait for you to type.

Would it be better to use / to represent integer division than ÷?

I guess the key missing point is the lack of precision is in binary so it doesn't just look like truncation in base ten.
